A good place to situate the start of theoretical debates about women, class, and work is in the intersection with Marxism and feminism. Such debates were shaped not only by academic inquiries but also as questions about the relation between women's oppression and liberation and the class politics of the labor movement. In the late 19th and 20th centuries, particularly in culture of poverty, economist John Kenneth Galbraith 1979 claimed that the cultures of the least industrialized nations held them back. Building on the ideas of anthropologist Oscar Lewis, Galbraith argued that some nations are crippled by a culture of poverty, a way of life that perpetuates poverty from one generation to the next.
